Twice-Told Tales: Classical & Biblical Stories in Later Retellings

This class will explore several important narratives from the Hebrew Bible and the Greco-Roman classical tradition, investigating how they were altered or transformed during the European Renaissance and later. In a unit called “Journeys and Homecomings,” for instance, we’ll start with Homer’s Odyssey and then follow it with Margaret Atwood’s novel The Penelopiad, which offers a very different perspective on the Trojan War and the wanderings of Odysseus: the perspective, that is, of Penelope, his long-suffering wife. Similarly, in “Coping with the Fall” we will read the Book of Genesis and then move to such literary retellings as John Milton’s Paradise Lost and Andrew Marvell’s “The Garden.” Finally, our unit entitled “God + Suffering = The Problem of Evil” will start with the Book of Job and then turn to two English tragedies, Christopher Marlowe’s Doctor Faustus and Shakespeare’s King Lear. Students in this class will be expected to participate vigorously in many discussions (both in class and online through Canvas), to take a number of reading quizzes, to write a research-based argumentative essay of roughly 10-12 pages, and to complete a take-home comprehensive exam.
